(Glenwood)

A young boy's generosity inspired the creation of a children's book that's sales will help those with autism spectrum disorder. Five-year-old Frankie one day woke with the mission to help others. He told his grandmother that he wanted to donate his piggy bank money to Glenwood, a Birmingham non-profit benefiting those with autism spectrum disorder, instead of treating himself to an ice pop like he had planned.

"I just want to help people, GiGi," he said. "Jesus wants us to."

Frankie inspired Glenwood to share his story in the form of a children's book in order to raise funds for the non-profit. The book, titled Frankie's Change, is a truly collaborative and community-driven effort with writing by Glenwood employees and illustrations created by some of the individuals that Glenwood serves. The book's printing was sponsored by National Bank of Commerce and printed by local Birmingham printer Craftsman Printing. All proceeds will go towards benefiting those that Glenwood serves.

Frankie's Change is available to buy online alongside with
